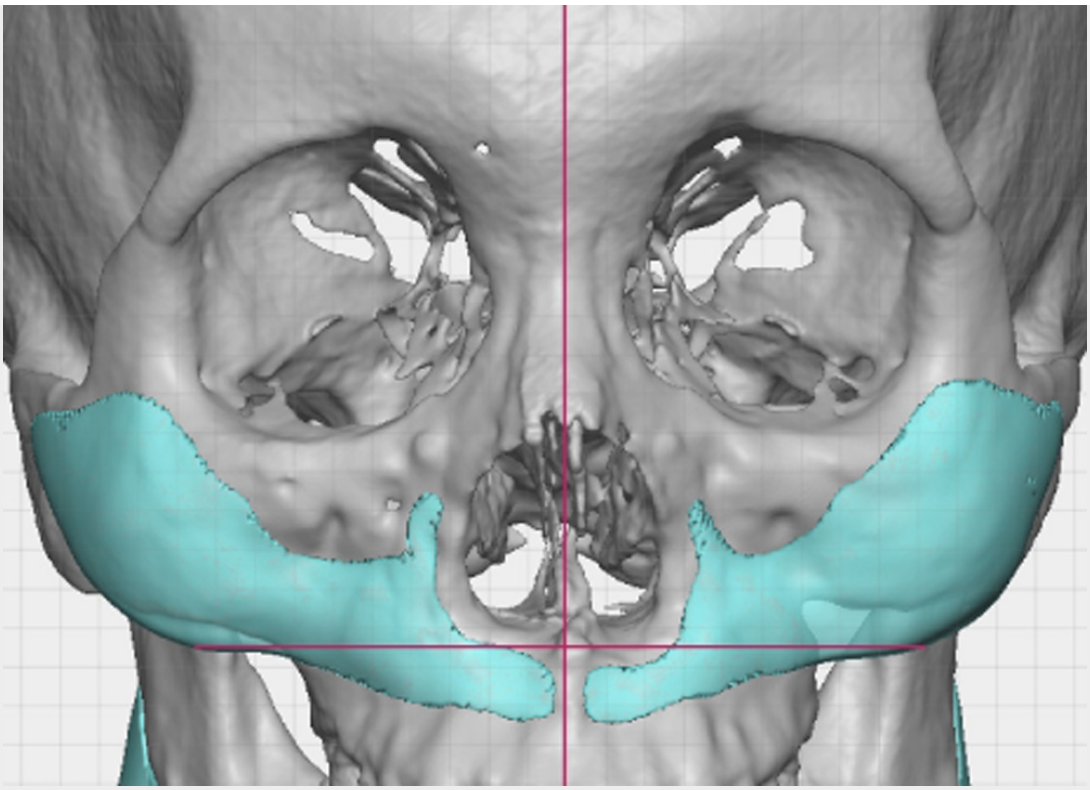
I'm thinking about getting the combined zygo implant and the undereye implant from Eppley as well. I actually read the entire other thread unlike some of the people asking repetitive questions here. You look handsome as fuck now so good job.

I saw you talking about paranasal implants as well. Why didn't you get them at the same time? Do you have any worries/doubts about paranasal implants in general or just for your face? Also what do you think about a big combined zygo/infraorbital/paranasal implant such as in this picture:



It makes the zygo implant "taller" so I guess I'm worried that it'd be too bulky compared to two separate implants, but it's possible that taller zygo implants are more masculine so idk.

Now this question was not aimed at me but I am gonna give you my input

A full zygo implant (infraorbital zygomatic region + lateral zygo region) is good enough. Honestly paranasal implants are the worst implants in existence because you're practically camouflaging an underbite. So drop the lower extensions (mainly the one below the red mark)

As you already know your result are quite dependent on your soft tissue what still matters is the projection width which is also dependant on your soft tissue and your aesthetic goals. I haven't seen your face so I don't know what you are trying to do but I can tell you that if you have bite problems (to opt for paransal implants) youre better off looking at lefort and actually fixing your bite. If your bite is fine, then don't consider paranasal implants anyway

Regarding the zygomatic region where you want to show projection, your CT scan will determine that area, I forgot what its called it might be the 'point of dimension' Im not sure but that's basically the area which you'd want the most projection in. From what I have seen its most highlighted in the zyogomatic infraorbital and very visible from 3/4 face view (oblique view) region and your surgeon can show you this through infrared scanning on the implant, the most reddish region would be the area getting the most projection for example)

As an example:

Coicnidentally this is also the area you are interested in augmenting to stick to implants like these. Now your region of most projection should differ to your goals because the male and female anatomy regarding zygos are different. As a male, we want high zygos projecting and not giving the apple shape implant

As a female its different.

Regardless don't bother into paranasal implants

It's not about size I could have asked for even 1cm projection but it would look unnatural/not fit my features

What a godly result. Fancy bumping into you here , we talked a bit on another forum when you were looking into HA. Much better decision to go to Eppley

Question - can you participate in contact sports with these implants?

There is no reason not to as the implant feels hard as a rock and is secured by multiple screws. its not going anywhere but I probably wouldn't practice martial arts for the peace of mind.

I had to get a CT Scan in my own country and send it to him weeks before surgery.

Did you fly to the us to design the implant together with eppley or was it done over skype? (Or did he just do it himself) you're cucking yourself by sharing all this online. Next mainstream channel will use your pic as evidence of "wacky" PSL culture. Incel tag to you. Known IRL as fake face incel or whatever. Just heads up

Regardless, best of luck with all

He has design sessions himself with a manufacturing company and patient is not allowed to participate. He has 3 sessions and after each one he shares the design with patient and if he has any suggestion /alternations they're taken in consideration in next session.

Btw I would recommend going few mm bigger. Eppley can trim them with scalpel during surgery if he feels they are too big and don't suit you but if they're too small there's not much that can be done.

So am I right to assume he shared the session results with you over skype?

Thanks for the note, getting implants and realizing afterwards they are too small would be quite shitty which part exactly? arches or zygomatic surface? you are probably confusing it with the infraorbital region i get what you mean but it is not really a part of eye area boyo, infraorbitals creates undereye support, not the sphenozygomatic suture.
